Biology Objective And Essay Real

It has, perhaps, no objective reality apart from the living body and, hence, evades definition. Aristotle (304-322 B.C.), the ancient Greek naturalist and father of modern biology (Fig. 2), recognised plants and animals as living objects, but failed to put forward a precise definition of life. Though life has not been accurately defined even today, yet the presence of life can easily be inferred from the activities of the organisms.
